		It has been great as a parent to hear my children (I had an older son at the Gilberd as well) talk so confidently and knowledgeably about consent, bullying vs banter, body image and a range of other topics. I have been really impressed with the way that they have been taught this and their capacity to discuss what we would never have talked about when my husband and I were at school. Thank you very much.

		I wonder if there is a place for discussions about certain topics in single sex groups as well as mixed gender groups? I appreciate this raises the issue of those who identify as a different gender or none at all.

		This policy seems very thorough, and I only wish I had this when I was attended secondary education

		Please include choice and abortion for girls. They need to know what is available to them. Unless I missed a topic that will be talked about

		This is a well-written policy; thank you for sharing it. The most important aspect for me is for the information to delivered at an age-appropriate level. Some of these children will only turn 12 next summer and they still believe in Santa Clause, so sensitivity and awareness of their young age is key. I agree that they need to learn about relationships etc, but it all depends on how the material is conveyed to them.

I don't think FGM and detail such as that should be covered in year 7, but graphic for that age group. Should perhaps be year 9. I also don't recall my son mentioning any lessons in money, interest etc in year 7. We will of course teach him about money management but this is a good idea to include for those children whose parents won't.	No

The programme seems to be very thorough and up to date. It includes a wide variety of issues.	No

You cover so many topics some, which as a parent make me feel uncomfortable so I am grateful that you start the conversations which we can then follow up at home.	Yes	Do you ask the students if there are any topics they would like to cover?
	No
Great coverage of topics, but would help to give pupils more practical advice and not only information. LGBTQ+ information would be best earlier, start of year 7, as many people start exploring their gender and sexual identity at about year 6.	No

It would be useful to share the content of the lessons and language used with parents rather than just a sub-heading overview.	No
